THREE of the men duped into kissing a transsexual for Sky TV reality show There's Something About Miriam were exposed yesterday.

One is a ski instructor of 23, another a martial arts expert aged 21 and a third is a 22-year-old barman. Pals know their secret - but due to legal action against the show's makers they can't be identified.

Sky TV sued over transgender trick

LONDON, Oct. 31 (UPI) -- Six British men have filed lawsuits against Sky TV for fooling them into kissing a man that appeared to be a woman, the London Mirror said Friday.

The contestants hoped to win $17,000 and a week on a yacht with the sultry brunette who starred in the reality show, "There's Something About Miriam."

The young men say they were told to impress "her" by performing macho and romantic acts, such as intimate massages, caressing and cuddling, holding hands and kissing.

But they were horrified to learn after three weeks of filming that Miriam is a man, said to be planning a sex change.

All six contestants walked out.
